TOO THIN

1

You can easily see their ribs without any fat padding, notice a tucked belly, and easily spot the bones in their lower back and hips.

2

You can see their ribs and lower backbone easily, notice a tucked belly, and there's no fat padding.

3

You can feel the ribs with little fat covering. You'll see the bones in the lower back, and there's a noticeable waist with minimal belly fat.

4

Feeling ribs with just a bit of fat covering. There's a noticeable waist behind the ribs, a slightly tucked belly, and not much fat in the abdomen.

IDEAL

5

Well-proportioned and you can feel their ribs under a bit of fat. There's a visible waist behind the ribs, though not very obvious, and minimal fat padding in the belly.

TOO HEAVY

6

You can feel the ribs under a bit of extra fat, and there's a visible but not obvious waist or fat pad in the belly. There's no tucked belly.

7

When there's moderate fat covering, you can't easily see or feel the ribs. The waist isn't visible, and there might be a bit of roundness in the belly. You'll notice some fat padding in the belly.

8

You can't feel the ribs due to too much fat, there's no waist, and the belly is noticeably round with a big fat pad. You'll also see fat over the lower back.

9

When you can't feel or see the ribs under a heavy fat cover, there's a lot of fat over the lower back, face, and limbs. The belly looks distended (swollen or expanded), with no visible waist and a lot of fat.
